Three OC supervisors, ACLU Lawyer to Speak

Three of Orange County’s five supervisors, and a lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union will visit campus next month to participate in political science courses. Supervisor James Silva will speak to Lee Miller’s class on Tuesday, October 9, from 9:30-10:50 a.m., in H-136. Silva — who caused political shocks by changing his stance on the proposed El Toro airport twice last week — will discuss current political issues in Orange County.

Dan Tokaji, a lawyer with the ACLU, will participate in Miller’s class on Tuesday, October 16, from 2-3:20 p.m. It also is being held in H-136.

Will California be the next Florida? He will discuss “Common Cause v. Jones,” the court case intended to ban punch-card ballots.

Two more Orange County supervisors take part in Miller’s course on Wednesday, October 17, from 11 a.m.-12:20 p.m. That class meets in H-329.

The supervisors are former NOCCCD Trustee Cynthia Coad, and Charles Smith. They will also discuss the county’s topical political issues.

All three of the presentations are open to students, faculty, staff and the community. There is no admission charge.

For more information, call Miller at ext. 78387.
